Mission

The British Interplanetary Society promotes the exploration and use of space for the benefit of humanity, by connecting people to create, educate and inspire, and advance knowledge in all aspects of astronautics.

Published by the British Interplanetary Society

Volume 59 No. 2 February 2017

52-53 German female astronauts

Having introduced the competition to find Germany's first woman astronaut in last month's issue of Spaceflight, Tony Quine now provides brief biographical details on the candidates.

54-58 Remembering Apollo 1

Fifty years on from America's first catastrophe in a manned spacecraft, the Editor looks again at the tragic circumstances which led to the loss of three astronauts and to the wider repercussions.

59-61 Humans in Space – an Update

In this age of political convulsions Spaceflight reviews the changes and the challenges now facing protagonists of human space missions and asks whether it is not time to renew links with the commercial world.

62-65 STRAWMAN – The Deep Black Signals Intelligence Satellite

Intelligence analyst and specialist Dwayne Day opens the books on a class of satellite which served both tactical and strategic interests during the chilly days of the Cold War.

66-69 Volker Lieberg

Renowned Belgian space historian and archivist Theo Pirard speaks with the outgoing head of ESA's Earth observation satellite programmes and discusses the development of the integrated pan-European programme.
